The webserver is a Ubuntu 14.04 LTS. The uploaded files have a size of less than 5MB. But when I try to upload files with a size of 5MB or bigger they are not stored on the webserver. The code looks like this: using (var client = new WebClient()) { client.Credentials = new NetworkCredential("user", "pass"); client.UploadFile("", "POST", "application/zip", "/file.zip"); } How can I solve this problem? A: I solved it by setting the client.UseDefaultCredentials = false; Q: php script to upload a video file to youtube.com I have a php script that uses the flash-upload library to upload files to the server. I would like to be able to change the folder to upload files to youtube.com/v/... instead of my script. Is there a way to do this? I have been searching the internet but found nothing useful. Any help would be appreciated. thanks A: You can't do this without the Google/YouTube API, since it's not just a PHP script which is why your server is not doing this for you. Even if you wrote your own script, there's no way for you to pass it the username, password, etc., etc. to actually log into YouTube and upload the video. If you want this feature, you're going to have to rely on the API, which is what YouTube offers as a service. I never understood how a database can be backing up. The documentation on this website is not very clear. All it says is that it can backup and restore databases. Is that the only way to do it? I do not think so. I would like it if you could explain in detail how to backup and restore. I think you have answered my question. Thank you. A: That is a very generic question about backups, and I would recommend you to have a look at this question for a better place to ask that kind of question. In case you want to try it, you can always have a look at CloudHQ's products. CloudHQ offers a DB-backup to/from S3, on-site, on-premise, to local or remote machines, database or source code. You can also take a look at their API documentation, as well as their community forums. Hope it helps. Best regards, Elois ...) go into the $RANDOM variable and return it in the CMD format.
