Home > Construction > Duct Work PROJECT SUMMARY: The long-term goal of this proposal is to elucidate mechanisms by which respiratory tract fibroblasts, epithelial cells, and immune cells interact to protect the lung from injury during bacterial infection and tissue remodeling. The hypothesis is that the interactions between these cells are both reciprocal and non-reciprocal. The initial studies will focus on the effects of epithelial and fibroblast secreted factors that regulate the production and release of matrix metalloproteases, which are critical for matrix degradation and critical for repair of the lung after injury. The Specific Aims are 1) To assess the relative importance of cell-specific and cell non-cell autonomous (autocrine and paracrine) mechanisms of regulation of MMPs. 2) To examine signaling pathways by which epithelial and fibroblast derived factors signal in lung fibroblasts to regulate MMP release. 3) To identify and validate bio-molecular targets that are important mediators of the signaling pathways and processes of fibroblast-epithelial interactions. This project should provide a focused understanding of the intercellular signaling, matrix changes, and cell-cell interactions of the airway epithelium and fibroblasts. This understanding will facilitate the development of treatments for lung disease of which excessive matrix deposition and scarring are the common underlying themes, including ARDS, emphysema, and COPD. In the first year of support of this proposal, Dr. Vandewalle will work with collaborators to develop robust and efficient high-throughput methods of screening for bio-active epithelial and fibroblast derived factors as well as the quantification of pathways of epithelial and fibroblast derived factors on MMP production in fibroblasts. She will use these methods to screen by phage display for peptides that interact with signaling factors produced by the lung epithelial cells that are important for fibroblast function 0cc13bf012

The present study aimed to examine whether immunization with live recombinant Escherichia coli cells expressing the type 1 fimbrial antigen F41 induced a protective effect on the development of Salmonella enteritidis infections in broiler chickens. Broiler chickens were divided into 3 groups: vaccine group, control group, and unimmunized group. After immunization, the broiler chickens were challenged with virulent S. enteritidis. The results demonstrated that broiler chickens in the vaccine group had an approximately 1.5-log reduction in S. enteritidis-log reduction at day 2 (p
